Two Members of Harvey Class Action Speak to the Chicago Tribune!

The teen started to cry as she spoke of what she has lost since then: her senior year of high school, prom, emotional bonds with family and friends. She blames not just the rapist but also police treating her like a "nuisance."

"I just feel like I could have been so much further in life right now. Because of this situation, because of what they did, I feel just so held back," she said, her voice cracking.

Both young women are part of a broader pending lawsuit brought by alleged rape victims against Harvey. The suit was filed by attorney Yao Dinizulu, who said it could affect more than 700 victims from cases dating to 1997. The lawsuit is among scores filed by victims and suspects over the years, many of which Harvey has settled. Read More...
